BROUGHT TO YOU BY

Tennessee Association of Professional Mediators

Message from TAPM President 2009-2010

LEIGH ANN ROBERTS

Greetings fellow mediators and ADR professionals.

I am looking forward to serving this year as your TAPM President; however, right off the bat, let me just state for the record that I prefer Madame President as my title- please make a note of it. All joking aside, there are great things in store for you as TAPM members this year. Building on the strong work of past TAPM leadership (this is my official "shout-out" to Jack Waddey, Marietta Shipley and Randal Mashburn), our organization is expanding its member benefits and offerings this year and working diligently to educate individuals and organizations in Tennessee about mediation. Annual Conference Starts and Ends with High Conflict!

By New TAPM Members Donita Brown and Jay Crosson

Tennessee Association of Professional Mediators (TAPM) held their annual conference at Lipscomb University on March 27, 2009. Bill Eddy, President and co-founder of High Conflict Institute, presented "Mediations Involving High Conflict Personalities". While Mr. Eddy cautioned the group on diagnosing a person with a Personality Disorder (PD) or having a High Conflict Personality, he pointed out that many challenging participants in mediation may exhibit PD traits. Meet the Mediator

LAURI CHAUDOIN

Lauri has more than a decade of experience in corporate law, with an emphasis on labor and employment and construction law. Much of her experience was gained while serving as Assistant General Counsel and Director of Public Relations for a major aggregates company. Lauri began her mediation career in 2003, as a volunteer for Nashville Conflict Resolution Center. In 2008, Lauri began her own legal and mediation practice, ChaudoinLaw, to help both businesses and individuals find focused legal solutions. She earned her J.D. at Vanderbilt University School of Law, and her B.A. in Communications at Belmont University. Prior to attending law school, Lauri was Associate Producer of News at Nashville's NBC affiliate, WSMV. Get to know Lauri, by clicking MEET THE MEDIATOR

New Resource: ABA National Ethics Opinions Database

by Marnie Huff

Practicing mediators, advocates, and academics have a new treasury of ethics information: a searchable database with hundreds of public domain opinions on mediator ethics from ADR Commissions and similar bodies in 43 states. Opinions in the ABA National Clearinghouse for Mediator Ethics Opinions are catalogued by keyword, state, year, opinion type, and category. The “category” code is organized under the nine standards in the Revised Model Standards of Conduct for Mediators, adopted by the ABA, AAA and ACR in 2005. The database also contains short summaries of each opinion with a hyperlink to the original opinion or document issued by the state or national body, when available. The free database is available on the ABA web site at <http://www.abanet.org/dispute/clearinghouse.html>. To read entire article, please click: ABA National Ethics Opinions Database

CASES & RESOLUTIONS:

Courts Seriously Consider Sanctions for Failing to Appear in Person at Mediation

The North Carolina Court of Appeals sent back to the trial court a decision imposing sanctions on parties who failed to appear in person at a court-ordered mediation. Under North Carolina law, all individual parties must appear in person unless they obtain a court order or the agreement of the other parties and mediator. The trial court imposed over six thousand dollars in sanctions, but failed to determine whether the absent parties' excuses of a delayed flight, inability to get off work, and lack of funds constituted good cause for not appearing and relying on a co-party and input by telephone. The appellate court also stated that the trial court should determine whether the parties seeking sanctions had waived their right to sanctions by mediating for over eight hours, and noted the importance of determining the reasonableness of the attorneys' fees and costs requested.

Mediation Quote:

“Conflict specialists...can be a vital part of helping people and organizations address what appear to be the ever more complex dilemmas everyone faces. In doing so, we do not have to claim to have the magic bullet to address the big issues, to oversell our potential contribution, or to insist that we are the sine qua non for dealing with major disputes. There is no magic bullet... But we...have the capacity, and perhaps the obligation, to enhance people's effectiveness in facing the most significant struggles of their lives.”

Fifteen-Year-Old Lawsuit Against Nuclear Company with Exposure of $1 Billion Settled in Mediation for

Agreements as Written

Settling parties provided that the remedy for not carrying out their mediated settlement agreement would be a judgment for the unpaid amount, so a New Jersey appellate court reversed the trial court's decision to reinstitute the original claims. The appellate court explained that if the parties wanted the option to bring back their original litigation as remedy for a breach, they needed to include that in the settlement and seek the acquiescence of the court.

Federal Mediation Privilege Supported by Court Dicta

The federal district court in McNeil Sampson v. Lancaster School Board, (E.D. Pa.), found persuasive the reasoning of federal courts which have adopted a federal mediation privilege, which is discussed in detail, but based its decision on other grounds. In the underlying dispute, a mediation over discrimination allegations against a school system was attended by the school's attorney who then prepared a memorandum to the school board about the mediation and the claimant's perception of conspiracy and aggressive stance in the mediation, after which the claimant was fired. In the ensuing litigation, the claimant asserted that her termination was retaliation for participating in mediation and sought discovery related to the mediation. However, the court concluded that the claimant could not depose the school's attorney and that the memorandum drafted about the mediation was protected under the attorney-client privilege. The court also noted that a state mediation privilege is not applicable in a federal case involving both state and federal claims.

Governor and Union to Mediate

With the governor of Vermont beginning layoffs that could eliminate 400 state employees in an effort to reduce costs, the legislature passed a joint resolution calling on the administration and the Vermont State Employees' Association to enter into mediation over how to come up with state payroll savings. The resolution gives the mediation two weeks to find solutions before the end of the legislative session.

Remaining 9/11 Cases Mostly Settled in Mediation

Ninety-two of 95 lawsuits by victims of the September 11, 2001 attacks have been settled in mediation by the airlines and other defendants for about $500 million. Plaintiffs in these 95 lawsuits had opted out of the special fund established by Congress which distributed over $7 billion to more than 5,000 survivors. The mediator noted that a significant number of the disputes were more about the families having a chance to express their losses or anger than about money. Face-to-face encounters between the families and airline representatives were critical in about a third of the settlements and there were "lots of tears," according to the mediator. Trial dates have not been set in the remaining three cases.

Mediator Facilitates Six-Month Discussion on Health Care Policy

Eighteen health-interest groups, including insurers, consumer advocates and hospitals, issued a report urging the government to meet the goal of all Americans having health insurance. With the help of a mediator over a six month period progress was made by the groups, which called their effort the Health Reform Dialogue, but consensus was not reached on divisive issues such as whether to mandate that all consumers must obtain health insurance. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees pulled out of the talks in February and the Service Employees International Union didn't join on the report, but the 18 groups that issued the report included large entities such as the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America and the American Medical Association.

Case Against Hospital Begins Second Year

Over 135 plaintiffs claiming sexual abuse as children by a doctor entered into mediation in March 2008 with the hospital they claim failed to stop the abuse. The court hoped the mediation would be concluded by the end of 2008, but it may continue for months more. The doctor worked for the hospital from 1963 to 1993 and died in 1998. Large amounts of child pornography were found in 2007 in the doctor's former home. State legislation is being considered which would extend the statute of limitations when new evidence is uncovered that could not reasonable have been discovered previously, which could impact about 40 to 50 plaintiffs.

Climate Change Disputes May Benefit from Mediation

Increasing numbers of lawsuits and disputes are arising from climate change allegations, which are being taken more seriously by the courts. The cases are complex and often involve multiple parties, so are often well suited to mediation where a skilled mediator can help the parties work through the issues to reach better outcomes, including sophisticated solutions that could not be achieved in other ways. However, a few cases do need judicial or political decisions on the scope of rights and remedies.

Foundation Frequently Uses Mediation to Assist Seriously Ill Patients

A national non-profit, the Patient Advocate Foundation, relies on mediation to ensure that patients with life threatening or debilitating diseases have adequate access to care or receive other needed assistance. The Foundation’s annual Patient Data Analysis Report states that over 48,000 matters were successfully managed for patients last year using mediation or arbitration. The report noted that 93% of patients helped by the Foundation had some health insurance, but were often “underinsured” and lacked the ability to obtain the coverage needed.

Recession Shifting Disputes to Mediation

Commercial mediators and mediation groups note that corporations may be waiting to initiate litigation in some disputes in order to save costs, but many other conflicts are being brought into mediation more quickly than in the past in order to minimize litigation costs. Moreover, some mediators note that parties may be more amenable to settlement now than in the past, given the pressure on litigation budgets. The weak economy is reawakening clients and advocates to the benefits of mediation, which could well lead to permanent increases in the use of mediation, especially in mid-Atlantic states and other regions of the country that have been slower to shift to mediation.

Value of Mediation Seen in Tough Economic Times

Challenging economic times may increase the number of disputes, leading more people to turn to mediation for resolution. In New Zealand, a free pilot mediation service began in March for smaller disputes between individuals, while the maximum dollar size of disputes handled by the Disputes Tribunal was increased. Mediation experts note that in addition to generally being less expensive, mediation often reaches better solutions for the businesses and other parties involved.

Texas Legislation Proposes Pretrial Victim-Offender Mediation Programs

The Texas House of Representatives passed, without any opposition, legislation that would authorize cities and counties to establish pretrial victim-offender mediation programs for misdemeanors and certain felonies. Under H.B. 2139, mediation would only occur with the consent of both victim and defendant, and would result in charges being dismissed against the defendant if an agreement is reached which includes an apology along with restitution or community service by the defendant. Mediators need not be trained and the programs may charge defendants up to $500 in fees. The legislation was amended before passage to also include a juvenile victim-offender pilot program.

Despite inertia, business disputes in Michigan are increasingly being resolved through mediation, rather than
